

SENDS ENVOY TO EXPLAIN ARMS OFFER TO GENEVA

Acts to Translate His Words Into Action in World Parley

Berlin, May 18 (INS)—Gratified over the world reception accorded his plea for peace and equality, Chancellor Adolf Hitler moved today to translate his words into action.

The chancellor summoned Dr. Rudolph Nadelny, chief German delegate to the disarmament conference at Geneva, and charged him with the task of laying Germany's offers and proposals in behalf of European peace before the of Chancellor Hitler, which pledged Germany to support of President Roosevelt's disarmament proposal and adherence to the MacDonald plan, if other nations act similarly will henceforth serve as the German arms platform at Geneva.

FOR IMMEDIATE CUT

Acting on these instructions, Na

Nadolly will maintain the same firm attitude, he said, in Geneva, since advent of the new regime, but he will be willing to reiterate the chancellor's sweeping offer to dissolve the German army and destroy all Germany's arms if the other nations will likewise agree to sacrifice their military powers on the altar of peace.

In his conciliatory speech before the Reichstag, Hitler, in the opinion of the German press, fulfilled domestic expectations that he would make clear once and for all that Germany is determined not only to regain her self-respect but also to co-operate with the civilized world in eliminating forever the

UP TO OTHER POWERS

The general impression here is that Germany has gone to the full limit of co-operation and collaboration in behalf of peace and that it now devolves upon the other powers and the disarmament conference to seize upon her initiative and achieve results.

Chancellor Hitler, it was learned is anxious that the disarmament conference conclude some general agreement in principle before the world economic conference meets in London on 12.

TALKS OF NEW JELKE'S GAY COCKTAIL PARTIES ARE WOULD

HUSBAND BARES DOUGLASS' COCKTAIL PARTIES

Dowagers and Debs Vie for Seats at Spicy Hearing

Newport, R. I., May 18.—Crusty dowagers vie with thrice-told debs in seeking admission to Superior Court here today as the double-barreled Jelkes diverse suit was into its fourth day of spicy testimony.

Jelke, himself, startled his exclusive audience with an account of the cocktail parties witness had declared his wife indulged in at his Newport estate, while he was in Chicago at his dying father's bedside.

Jelke testified, after Judge Walsh had ruled that previous descriptions of the gay cocktail parties Mrs. Eugene Jelke staged at "Eagles Nest" are not to be considered as "excessive drinking."

LOCKED HER OUT
Although the courtroom gallery—in which the fashionable society colonists were liberally represented—was denied the 52-year-old millionaire broker's story of his courtship of the 27-year-old niece of the late Sen. Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama, there in the courtroom did hear—

That Mrs. Jelke, known as Nina to her husband and the gayer "Major," is here now and hithering in her husband to admit her husband, but his wife often came out and she couldn't come to him. That in the past, the distinguished guest, she cursed Jelke and called him a string of vile names.

That Jelke emerged from a conference with his wife in a shirt torn, and his face "very red."

WITNESS IN HIDING
Throughout the day the smartly dressed spectators whispered the report that Mrs. Ethel Hartman, witness of the Birmingham case, whose testimony related Nina kept love trysts with the "Major," is here now and hithering in Jelke's pretentious mansion.

Jelke said that his wife often swore at him and called him objectionable names. On one occasion he called her from Chicago and was cursed over the telephone by a telephone operator who, he said, then, in a week, told him that in Chicago, the "Major" was hilarious, with her dog, "Sugar," which I had bought for her in Newport.

WITNESS PAID BY JELKE
Jelke testified that his first met "Ethel" at the Chicago hotel in Newport. He said she passed several weeks-end in his home before their marriage.

Jelke's testimony was corroborated by Thomas L. Hadden, his friend of the couple, who admitted under cross-examination that he had no livelihood, but that as a friend, was paying him $20 a week.

"Ethel," according to Hadden, was fond of cocktail parties. He described one which he attended, and another couple attended at the Algonquin Hotel, Long Island, in September, 1931.

3-DAY COCKTAIL BOUT
The party lasted three days, Hadden said, and on the third day, after a session that lasted till dawn, Nina was feeling pretty much "worn out."

Hadden said he frequently urged Mrs. Jelke to go back to her husband's Newport estate.

"I don't like the kind of New York dowagers," the young Southern bride replied, Hadden said.

Mrs. Jelke's behavior during her husband's absence in Chicago was described by the sales career manager.

MR. TOWER ENTERS
He had hardly acted away the caretaker, Arthur A. Wendler, testified, when Nina called in a gay company of companions.

She had the key to the wine cellar, he said, and she used it to confined. She invited a girl friend, a Miss Rand, to come and stay with her, Wendler testified.

There was a continual procession of gentlemen to the big home, he said, but he could recall the name of only one, a Mr. Hadden.

Jelke's swift motor cruiser was pressed into service for cruises in the sound, on which Nina and Miss Rand always took the boys.

On one Sunday, Mrs. Jelke gave a cocktail party for eight couples of young people, he testified.

TORE HIS SHIRT
Temperamentous scenes in which the stormy Nina, her husband, Nina's feeble old parents were the principal actors in the Chicago Gold Coast home of the Jelkes were described in depositions.

Once Jelke rushed from a row involving his parents and his wife to his face very red and his shirt ripped from his back, Miss Ruth Buckley, one of the suitors attending the sally, after Jelke's deposition.

On another occasion, according to Miss Rosemary Klenner, another nurse of the invalid, Nina was fetching sick pajamas, approached her husband's locked bedroom door, knocked on it, and began to sing.

"Fruiter, Fruiter, let me in," she sang, and then she stopped.

"I had a turtle farm and decided to get rid of it. My wife didn't want to waste the turtles so she kept making turtle soup."

He had the turtles left for days and days. It is very good for the stomach and the blood, middle of the third and after that you don't want any more turtle soup. But there was one turtle left, a 15-pounder. I sneaked it out and dumped it on the road and my wife thinks it ran away."

An alleged strikebreaker was beaten on the head and face from man was arrested, and striking garment workers were pelted with missiles as the strike of garment workers involving 3000 workers and 100 shops continued in its third day today.

The victim of the attack was Victor Guillot, 37, of Conn. st., Woburn. He told police he was taken to union headquarters in a van, at by pickets today, and questioned about his status in the union and the shop, where he intended to work.

On his way out he said he was set upon by several men, alleged to be strikers, who beat him until frightened away by approaching officers. Police are looking for the assailants.

A near riot was started in Kneeland st. when somebody—said to be a non-striking worker—hurled large spools of thread from windows at strikers in the street below.

Ames, Kramer, exhibited a card sent to Martin Hamilton, of Tremont st., South End, by the state employment office in Congress at telling her that there were openings for strikers in a silk dress shop.

Only a sweat shop would seek employees through the state employment office," said Kramer. "The state employment office, help always apply to the union."

Ames, Kramer, superintendent, Everett L. Hanna, superintendent, of the state employment office, said: "We have sent no women to factories where a strike is in progress," he said. "Manufacturers are obliged to tell us if they have having labor troubles, and we are obliged to an inform applicants for work."

ARMS EMBARGO NOT DIRECTED AGAINST JAPS

By KENNETH CLARK
[Copyright, 1933, by Universal Service, Inc.]

Washington, May 18.—Making concessions to congressional opponents of the arms embargo resolution, the Roosevelt administration today had given assurances it would not invoke this drastic authority against Japan in the exclusive far eastern situation.

At the same time, Secretary of State Hull, in a confidential letter to the Senate foreign relations committee, agreed to modification of powers as the term "munitions of war" could not be construed to authorize this country entering an economic blockade against a foreign nation.

FEAR POWER

It was feared an embargo against Japan might ultimately lead to war like operations, and the broad powers of the resolution might permit the President, to join in measures tantamount to enforcement of sanctions against a so-called aggressor country.

Under the restricted language, the embargo would apply only to actual instrumentalities or articles of war. It would not include foodstuffs and materials which are essential to the life of the nation.

Sharp opposition developed in committee and it was agreed to delay a vote on the resolution until next Wednesday.

HULL SPEAKS

Secretary Hull said it would be "unpracticable" to declare an embargo against Japan. He added the authority might be used with good effect in the Bolivian-Paraguayan war, and in the dispute between Colombia and Peru.

Congressional circles interpret the embargo authority with grave misgivings. It is foreseen as a weapon to enforce sanctions after consultations by world powers, including the United States, to determine an aggressor country.

Senators pointed out the President's suggested pact of non-aggression, if it is anything more than a gesture for peace, implies the use of force, or sanctions, to make it binding. The embargo would be one method in a system of sanctions.

PARTICIPATION IN RECHTAD U. S. NOW

Geneva, May 18 (AP).—The rapid sequence of events in the last few days has largely placed the destiny of the disarmament conference in the hands of President Roosevelt and Chancellor Hitler. In the view of many conferees, the situation is critical.

The influence of these two men, it was said today, constitutes a powerful factor in directing the course of the conference, which awaits concrete initiatives on both sides.

The Roosevelt message to the world and the Hitler Reichstag address generally were regarded as clearing the air and producing a more hopeful atmosphere.

WHAT WILL WE DO?

1. Rigid international control of armaments.
2. Participation in a world pact of non-resort to force.
3. Helping the League in determining an aggressor.
4. Refraining from helping an aggressor once this determination had been affected.
5. Participation in any arms embargo.

DUE ALLOWANCE MADE

Geneva, recognized that the United States, like England, under its political system cannot give blanket promises in advance but must meet an attitude when a peaceful war disturbance arises.

But the opinion was expressed by conference delegates that an announced disposition to boycott a breaker of the peace would prove salutary in inducing armed nations to reduce their arms. This opinion was based on the theory that such an announcement would lessen the chances of invasion and of wars.

Taxes Pour in to Maine Officials

Augusta, Me., May 18.—The State Legislature, as a collection agency, has had a satisfactory effect on communities that were in arrears on their taxes owed the state.

A total of $48,000 in back taxes poured in during the first 30 days since an order directed the state treasurer to bring suit.

What Are You Going to Do About It?

A State after state falls in line for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment the doom of the liquor racketeer draws nearer.

Prohibition—as almost everybody now concedes—was the racketeer's bonanza.

The criminal element that garnered the lawless profits of prohibition existed in two general classes. They were the beer barons and the bootleggers.

The return of legal beer has ruined the beer barons—so much so that some of them are trying to "muscle in" on the legal business, and here and there throughout the country a few of their desperadoes hi-jack a brewery truck now and then.

These are evils to be rigidly repressed. Legal beer—paying its just taxes to government and bringing back temperance—must be KEPT FREE from racketeering and racketeer's tricks.

AND meanwhile repeal must be completed so as to dispose equally well of the hard liquor racketeer.

In the words of Jonett Shouse, president of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment: "Racketeering and crime must be suppressed . . . observance of the law must be made possible. Taxable revenues from liquor must go to the government, not to the bootlegger."

In order to clean up forever the whole racketeering mess that prohibition fostered, government—national, state and local—must be firm and honest, and every good citizen must back honest government up.

YOU can help. What are you going to do about it?

HITLER IN ARMS PLAN

believe economic reconstruction is impossible without disarmament, and holds that the best possible means that could be given to the economic conference would be a general agreement at Geneva.

Technical questions and other details could be worked out by committee later, Hitler believed.

According to present plan, Foreign Minister Von Neurath will not go to Geneva in the near future. The task of preparing the German people to the conference will be left to Nafeloy.

Hitler's Speech Wins Plaudits of Europe

World opinion today commended Chancellor Adolf Hitler of Germany for his dramatic speech in behalf of peace and equality before the Reichstag yesterday.

Every new color here indicating a new government spokesman in an government spokesman in the capital of Europe discussed his sweeping proposals.

The Hitler speech hailed the address as an "unqualified proof" that European peace will be maintained.

In London, where the stock market reacted favorably as result of the address, newspapers predicted the speech would create a "better atmosphere" in Geneva.

Some sections of the French press saw an attempt to shift the blame to France in event the disarmament conference fails.

Norman H. Davis, special American ambassador, will announce America's willingness to co-operate in an all-embracing cumulative pact where the disarmament conference reassembles.

World Sees Success in Geneva With Hitler

London, May 18 (INRS).—The way was cleared today for a four-power effort to obtain Germany's support of the aims of the disarmament conference following Chancellor Adolf Hitler's declaration that the Reich supports President Roosevelt's peace plan and refuses to remain an inferior nation.

With British officialdom relieved by the mild tone of Hitler's speech, it was learned today, it is learned what instructions are given to the German delegates to the disarmament conference.

David, International News Service was informed, is now arguing that France, Great Britain, Italy and the United States support Germany with a view to persuading the Reich to fit her foreign policy into the pattern proposed by the Geneva policy.

After study of the Hitler pronouncement, the British press and officials are disposed to agree that it provides a basis for continued and helpful discussions at Geneva.

Final approval of the German foreign policy, however, is reserved until it is learned what instructions are given to the German delegates to the disarmament conference.

British Economic Delegation Named

London, May 18 (AP).—Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald announced in the House of Commons today that he and seven cabinet members will make up the British delegation to the world economic conference opening June 12.

The other members of the delegation are: Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer; Sir John Simon, secretary for war; Sir John Simon, foreign secretary.

Police Club Drive Proves Failure

The much heralded police drive against speakeasies which operate under restricted club charters, a system first exposed by the Boston Evening American, will result in complaints against only three, it was learned today.

More than 100 such places are open in Boston, and police announced even the technicality of failing to report removal from one place to another would mean revocation of the charter.

Roosevelt Declares U. S. Has Not Dropped Isolation Policy

Washington, May 18.—While telegrams approving President Roosevelt's disarmament program were pouring in from abroad, the White House denied the United States has abandoned its traditional policy of isolation in international affairs.

An informal White House statement was given out to correct the "misunderstandings" which have apparently arisen in Great Britain and Germany regarding the American position.

It is said the disarmament program and non-aggression pact placed no obligation upon the United States except in these respects:

- 1.—If every other nation in the world agrees to eliminate offensive weapons of war, we will do likewise.
- 2.—If during the disarmament negotiations every other nation agrees not to invade its neighbors subject to riding treaty rights, the United States will do the same.
- 3.—If there is a violation of any such agreement or agreements, we will consult with the other powers on the situation.
- 4.—The White House said the third point involved no change in existing American policy, for after consultation with other powers the United States would be free to determine its own course of action.

THIRD BRIDAL IS NEAR

Mrs. Dorothy Benjamin Caruso Ingram, widow of Enrico Caruso, famed tenor, is to wed again, according to word from Paris. Mrs. Ingram, friends said, is to be married in June to Dr. Charles A. Holder of New York and Philadelphia, and former member of the U. S. Consular Service.

Engagement Ring Bares Secret Plans of Caruso's Widow

(Copyright, 1933, by Universal Service, Inc.)

Paris, May 18.—Mrs. Dorothy Benjamin Caruso Ingram, widow of Enrico Caruso, celebrated tenor, is to become a June bride, according to her friends here.

The bridegroom, friends say, will be Dr. Charles Adams Holder, of New York and Philadelphia, banker and former member of the United States consular service. Holder is a widower.

Mrs. Caruso Ingram is wearing an engagement ring, which her friends say is more convincing than her and Dr. Holder's persistent public denials of romance. It is said the couple plan to spend the summer at Fontainebleau.

Should the report be true, this would be Mrs. Caruso Ingram's third marriage. After the death of her famous first husband, she was married to Ernest A. Ingram, former captain in the British army, from whom she was divorced in 1926.

The untimely death in 1920 of Alexander P. Moore, publisher and former ambassador to Spain, is said to have ended a courtship which might have meant a third marriage for Mrs. Caruso Ingram.

Dr. Holder, a former vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Company and president of the American Banking Corporation, was previously married to the former Margaret Bonnell Taylor, of Philadelphia, who died of grippa here in January. Dr. Holder practiced medicine in Philadelphia and Colorado Springs, Colo., before entering the consular service, in which he served in England, Norway, France and Germany.

MAN RESCUED IN BLAZING AUTO

Rowley, May 18.—George Skaltsee, 28, of Newburyport, was saved from death today by State Trooper William Farnon of the Topsfield barracks, who pulled him from a blazing auto on the Newburyport turnpike between here and Newbury.

The machine operated by Skaltsee is owned by Albert Russell & Son, Newburyport auto dealers. He was on his way home when flames broke out in the front end of the car and quickly worked back to the driver's seat.

Farnon, passing by, stopped his cycle and pulled Skaltsee from the blazing car. The machine was a total loss.

The Americans to be presented tonight are: Miss Evangeline Bell, New York City; Mrs. Thomas Cottman, Baltimore; Miss Ruth Dean, East Orange, N. J.; Miss Eulalie Converse Harris, Valdosta, Ga.; Mrs. Hugh O'Neill Hencken, Boston; Miss Elizabeth Morgan, Biltmore, N. C.; and Mrs. T. Reed Vreeland, New York City.

Post to Make New Flight With Robot

Oklahoma City, May 18 (AP).—Wiley Post, co-holder of the Globe-Turning flight record, will try for a new round-the-world mark about July 1—this time with only a robot for a companion.

The "Winnie Mae," in which Post and Harold Goettler, navigator, circled the world in 6 days, 15 hours and 51 minutes in June, 1931, is being rebuilt, equipped with new and larger fuel tanks and a new motor at the Oklahoma City airport.

BOOKS—A Number of Things

By Charles Hanson Towne

Ernest Poole has written a fine, thoughtful novel in "Great Winds" (Macmillan). It might have been called "Property," or it might have been called "Life Was Like That," for it shows the futility of possessions, and it gives a beautiful picture of more tranquil days, particularly in New England.

It is told in the first person by a novelist who has gone back to his boyhood home in New Hampshire, there to find the peace and quiet he needs to complete his work.

His brother, Gilbert Blake, a successful New York architect, has remodeled the old house, set in the Big White Hills, and the novelist dreams of other homes being reconstructed in similar fashion, so that some of the old spirit may be revived in this section of our country.

But Gilbert, feeling the business depression of the time, must seek more lucrative work. He is pressed on every hand by debts incurred. He has a most extravagant second wife—a beautiful but selfish woman, who, enamored of Newport, and who comes vividly upon the scene, accompanied by a nouveau riche business friend, one Paul Fowler, a bald, ambitious fellow, Natalie is determined to have him build a fine place in the Rhode Island resort, and of course, it must be her husband who plans it.

In the early chapters the reader gets a splendid sense of the dream-like homestead to which the novelist has returned. Mr. Poole has seldom written better than in these passages, where he recreates the past and shows what America was meant to be. There is softness and gentleness and the growing world seems far away.

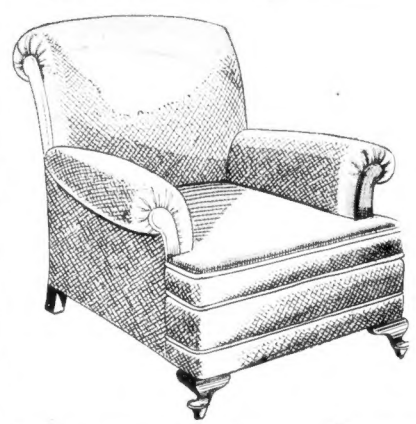

The arrival of the exotic Natalie and the man who is obviously in this placid domain, John Blake and his brother have been rebuilding their boyhood together, the architect oppressed by the burdens of the world, then, in a flash, motor, with a French maid, the changed. The smooth current of the life is suddenly charged with drama, and we see how worldly ambition and the futile hope for a comfortable life can ruin and waste the old simplicities, and push them over dangerous precipices.

Later, Ruth, a daughter of the architect, by a former marriage comes to this quiet place. She is married and from the Middle West, and it develops that her rather decent but incompetent young husband, and swamped with financial troubles, and needs the assistance of Gilbert Blake. The latter, worn with worry, harassed on every hand, is taken ill with one of his violent headaches, and it is only his sympathetic brother who seems able to comfort him. Ruth saves only about herself and her own small affairs. She is determined to extricate from her father the means that will bring her husband back to prosperity. Natalie, learning of her trouble, but dithering the girl, calls in Fowler to give counsel and advice. Ruth is resentful that any influence outside the family should be sought. There is jealousy between her and Natalie, a latent race, and the weak

Latest Notes of Fashionables

By Dorothy Whipple Fry

THERE IS SUCH A GLAMOUR to the way some people wear their clothes, anything they put on looks smart and attractive while another may have the most modish style and still not achieve that chic in dressing.

For instance, Miss Catherine Peabody, tall and slender, distinguished looking with light hair and blue eyes looked attractive the other night at the Dunster House dance in a Gypsy costume that immediately caught the eye. It was an exquisite blending of blue and lavender.

Miss Francis Scudder is another young lady who looks well dressed for every occasion. She attended the costume party at the Dunster House in a brown Clerk Gable sweater with a Marlene Dietrich pair of pants. Her escort was Mr. John Stenton. Her dress, low cut and modish in line. She is blonde and attractive.

Miss Nancy Nelson, escorted as usual by Ted Cole, wore a charming white evening dress with blue and green and gold hair and flashing blue eyes.

Miss Alice Means at the same dance was lovely in apple green pajamas with a blue ruffled ruffe about the neck, and green in an alluring way. Her red and gold hair was charmingly arranged.

Brushed back from her face and curled low in the neck.

Miss Elizabeth Eaton appeared this week in an attractive blue silk suit and matching hat. She wore a dainty lace blouse, most becoming to her. Dining with her was Miss Marion Ware in a dark black ensemble. Miss Ware is a petite person, slender, with dark hair and a twinkle in her brown eyes.

Miss Marion Esterbrook appeared in a snappy black silk model with black and white plaid trimmings, neatly looked with her golden hair, blue eyes and blonde complexion.

Have you seen how very smart Miss Jane Smith is looking in that gorgeous emerald given she is sporting this spring, cut on graceful slinky lines.

CHILDREN LARGE FOR THEIR AGE AND MOTHERS TOO SMALL CREATE A PROBLEM

A Good Dressmaker Frequently Solution for 'Hard to Fit' Woman or Girl

By Margaret Matson

"HAVE a large 11½-year-old daughter. Is it a mistake to have her wear 16-year-old clothes, which size fits? I find they made her look old. Any suggestions?" writes a mother. Time and again we've had the same question, for it is a real problem. My personal feeling is that it is better for the child to dress to her size than to her age.

In one case she looks older, in another younger. As a matter of fact, there are any number of sizes and 18 clothes in the shops, which because of their multiplicity, are really "children's." They have a way of taking on the age of the person wearing them, as well as their own. Younger or rather older.

Problems like the two pictured today are of this type. You can easily imagine the one on the left as becoming a girl of eleven or twelve even though it obviously wasn't intended for them. Summer is an easy time to fit youngsters who are too large. Almost everything on sale, in sports clothes, at least, is suitable for them as well as for their elders.

When we reach the fall and winter seasons, however, the difficulty increases. Then it is no wish to purchase clothes already made, one must exert a great deal of patience in shopping until the right thing is found. It usually exists, if one knows how to look for it.

On the other hand, a competent dressmaker who can work miracles is frequently the solution. One can take styles which are suitable and make them fit, or one can have a dress made to one's size and adapt the style sufficiently to solve the problem.

And this holds not only for large youngsters but for tiny women and people whose irregularities of figure make them hard to fit.

ANSWER to Mrs. G. H. A. Roberg. Sometimes when the dress has no hem to let down, there are ways in which the material can be supplemented and a piece set in at the waistline. If your height is sufficient to warrant it, you might get some harmonizing fabric and set in a wide giraffe effect or vest and such. Then the skirt can be let down to the bottom of it.

Strawberry Pie Comes Into Season

By MARTHA LEE

IF THERE'S ANYTHING in Indian folklore, strawberries have charms to soothe the savage breast, for is it bear? Anyway, strawberries are supposed to be great little reconditors when you've had a luff with your husband. The Indians believed that they were created by the Great Spirit in a final effort to tempt the first woman to stay with her man.

According to the story, she was all for calling it a day and going home in a huff. She started off with some in the air, through with him forever. But when she saw the strawberries growing in bountiful clusters behind the path, she couldn't help thinking that her lord and master might like them. She stopped and picked some for him, and they made up and lived happily ever after.

Of course, we can't guarantee the truth of this tale, much less the efficacy of the strawberries. But we do know that in the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of pie . . . and most particularly, to strawberry pie.

REBELS IN COUP BATTLE FOR CUBAN AREA

By CLIFFORD GALLOWAY

Havana, May 18 (via telephone, New York) (1287)—The most serious revolutionary movement since the inauguration of the Machado regime broke out today in Cuba, Clara province.

An insurgent force, estimated to number 800 to 1,000 men, landed on the south coast from Trinidad and immediately joined by other than insurrectionary bands.

In preliminary skirmishes between 75 and 100 men have been killed.

The rebels immediately attacked a town of Sancti Spiritus, where insurgents were active earlier in a week, and Moron and El Aceguero.

Col. Arsenio Ortiz, commanding rebel forces in Santa Clara Province, a stronghold of the revolution, movement, telegraphed to Havana for reinforcements.

Troops were rushed to the scene by the Col. Arsenio Ortiz.

Ortiz is stationed in Sancti Spiritus with 400 men. His instructions from President Machado were to take no prisoners.

Insurgents were reported at a town which seriously alarmed military authorities. More than 100 rebel soldiers in Santa Clara are reported to have gone over to the rebel side.

Reports from hospitals where wounded and dying federal soldiers were taken indicated the insurgents were resorting to the use of poison bullets.

AND CLOTHES PLAN JUBILEE

Friday, of this week, Bond's, new gown from the mail shop to 30 big stores, start celebrating a silver jubilee, with a series of large newspaper announcements covering 25th birthday special value.

In order to establish one quickly to high standard of quality and value, the Bond organization opened its own factory, which today employs nearly 100 expert tailors, who work 32 weeks every year, on a full-time basis.

The ten-penny plan is one of the basic policies of the Bond organization.

Much of the 25-year success of the Bond organization can be traced directly to the use of liberal newspaper space.

Ever since the first store was opened in 1908, newspapers have been the backbone of Bond's publicity, and to quote a Bond executive:

"We have decided to put all our eggs in the newspaper advertising basket, because that is where we catch the best results."

This will be borne out by the concentrated use of newspaper for the 25th birthday celebration, which starts in the Bond store in Boston on Friday of this week.

ONE OF THE BEST-PICKS BEST DRESSERS

Let's take a peep at Adolph Menjou, in two chic dress poses. Louella Parsons tells us that Mr. Menjou is considered in America and in Europe, as one of the best dressed of men. Menjou in speaking of clothes announces that if you would dress well—or look well—in dress "You must have a flair for clothes." Also you must have that "certain chic" that in the accompanying story Mr. Menjou tells you who the world's best dressed men are.

World's 12 Best Dressed Men Selected by Adolphe Menjou

By LOUELLA P. PARSONS
Universal Service

Hollywood, May 18—Who are the 12 best dressed men in the world?

What bakers dozen well-tuned out, well-dressed and correctly dressed men deserve the distinction of being the world's smartest dressers, Adolphe Menjou has his own idea. He says it isn't always the man who is outfitted in fine clothes and expensive linen who can be called well dressed, but it's the man who has the art of "wearing" clothes.

"A man to be classed among the world's best dressers," says Mr. Menjou, "must have a flair for clothes. He must know what he is wearing, and he must carry off the whole thing with just the right air."

"A man, who is chic," says Mr. Menjou, "can start almost any clothes and establish it as a popular mode. Such a man is extremely helpful to the merchant all over the world. Napoleon recognized the value of having his men well dressed. He passed an order that his soldiers must wear better uniforms and immediately there was an increased market for gold braid."

Mr. Menjou, who is recognized as one of the best-dressed men both here and abroad, gives the following men as his selection for the best dressed men in the world: Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., John Barrymore, William B. Dyer, Fred Astaire, Marie Curie, Prince of Wales, Prince George, Viscountess Grey, Antonio de Portugal, Maharajah of Alwar.

The Prince of Wales has a special flair for clothes and a chic that join the knots offer an unusual opportunity for interesting color combinations as well as the art of wearing them.

To be "the best-dressed man" must have that certain chic and a few men, according to Adolphe Menjou, possess them. It is an art or a talent, if you please.

20-Year Courtship Ended by Death, Court Action Reveals

Trovidence May 18 (AP)—A 20-year-old couple, which ended with the death of the woman on the day she was to have been married, was revealed in Superior or Court here.

Edward Dunphy, North Kansas City, fisherman, was to have married Miss Helen R. Biss, 20, of St. Louis, to 1931. A few days before that time she became ill and died on the day she was to have been her wedding day.

Dunphy now seeks compensation for her estate, which consists about $5000 in a savings account and $5000 in insurance proceeds. He wants to have put about three-fourths of the money into the savings account.

The suit is a bill of complaint brought against Henry Biss, a partner of Miss Biss, and administrators of the estate, and against the bank and the insurance companies.

Henri DeGlance Cables Dempsey Has Brains Returns Here in June As Well as Brains Look Out, Don George Worcester Hoppy By JACK CONWAY

Just so that we would have the news first, Henri DeGlance, former world's heavyweight wrestling champion, called from Paris he would arrive in this country early next month prepared to start a campaign to win back his title.

DeGlance added that the collarbone, which he shattered as he lost to Ed Don George, is all right again.

DeGlance was the world's outstanding wrestler at the time he met with the mishap which caused his defeat in his contest with George. The Frenchman in the most prominent able defense wrestler I have ever seen. He does not leave any openings. He tires his opponent out, and when the latter makes the slightest mistake scores with a fall.

Of course DeGlance will bring his heavy guns on George. Henri feels only a bad break in the luck enabled George to win from him. If these men ever clash again, wrestling will hit a new high in the matter of local attendance records.

DeGlance is one of the most courageous of athletes as well as a finished wrestler. I cannot say his return to this country will cause any great amount of joy to the numerous young men who have been setting themselves up as champions during his absence.

Jack Dempsey Still Ring's Leading Diplomat

Jack Dempsey, who is promoting the Schmeling-Baar bout, is still the greatest diplomat in the boxing game. Bill Corum and other sports writers have received letters from the Old Tiger in which he thanks them for the aid they have given his promotion. He respectfully asks for a little extra steam to the noble ballyhoo between now and the time of the match.

"Dempsey," a famous sporting character once said to me, "gives the sports writers a greater beating with his brains than he possibly could do with his fists."

The person who made this statement has had a better opportunity to study the Old Tiger than most of us. He learned that it was brains as well as brawn that got Dempsey to the top.

As a matter of fact, sports writers have done very little to help Dempsey in the promotion of the Schmeling-Baar bout. They have thrown a cold blanket on the bout partly on account of the Hitler ban on the Jews and because it is more popular to attack boxing than it is to praise it. Sports writers, like politicians, usually rule the waves.

I know some boxing promoters who would have written long, bitter letters to everybody who had an address if they had not received any more help than Dempsey has got with his Schmeling-Baar bout. Dempsey is too intelligent in the ways of promotion to do such a thing. So he thanks the sports writers for helping him. He will next invite them to visit Schmeling and Baer in their camps. They will accept his invitation.

I find that the enthusiasm that surrounds a boxing camp for a big match is contagious. I have started on trips to the camps of two boxers who were to meet in the ring next spring if ever saw them in action, but once I landed in the midst of the cheers I changed my views.

I never pick a winner of a bout just after leaving a training camp. If I did, I would name the man I had just seen work.

easyweight Bout Furnish Excuse for a Reunion

Heavyweight championship bouts have become the best excuse for a reunion. Jack Sharkey and Vernon Gorman met in New York on June 23 and will find people drifting into Old Manhattan from all parts of the country. It will not be because all of them will be greatly interested in seeing the bout, but they know that the match will bring their friends to New York.

The sessions in the hotel rooms until the small hours of the morning have a large appeal to persons interested in athletics. These now-and-then major matters are settled in a definite manner. Then the sports writers have a field day.

It is to see the little scrap. I know men who have missed championship bout since Dack knocked over Goltz with a left arm hook, or was it a stone?

Random Shots at the Target

Don Brouillard was paid $2000 for his winning bout with Sammy Slaughter. . . The heavy thumping Terse Haute middleweight brought $1500 which is enough to purchase plenty of pork chops. . . I saw Mayor John C. Mahoney of Worcester at the Brouillard-Slaughter show. . . He considered it a field day.

Don Brouillard, Al Brouillard and Vernon Gorman, all Worcester residents, won their bouts. . . The thought uppermost in the mind of Atty. Charles H. Jones is the opening of his summer home at North Scituate. . . Atty. Jones' home is just back of the Bathery Golf Club where plays a very good game of golf with his wife.

It is the queen of the links best for graciousness and golfing ability. . . Speaking of golf, I still believe the Blue Hill Country Club in Canton is one of the finest 18-hole layouts in New England. . . Johnny Ford is pro at the Blue Hill Country Club. . . I have seen Ford and deer while playing at the Blue Hill courses. . . And before playing the 18th hole, I have also seen snakes, but I hesitated in making this statement for fear you might make some unkind remarks about me. . . Go ahead and shoot, I have on my bullet proof vest, and plenty of cotton in my ears. . . Judging by the talk around town following the Brouillard-Slaughter bout I was right when I said there is nothing the matter with the boxing game when the right kind of matches are offered.

I'M TAKING NO MORE CHANCES WITH "GYP" RAZOR BLADES

Science warns that constant irritation from inferior or dull over-used blades may lead to lingering skin trouble

PHYSICIANS have long known that constant irritation often leads to infections or life-long maladies. And now it is found that unnecessary shaving irritation leads to many serious, lingering skin ailments.

Rashes, pimples, ingrown hairs—and even boils and eczema are only common results.

Danger often not noticeable

The harm done by shaving irritation is not always noticeable at first. But there are some symptoms which give warning. Men, who have used inferior, or dull blades for some time, find that their skin becomes more and more sensitive each day. Although they do not suspect anything unusual at first, they soon notice that each shave becomes more painful . . . and no matter how carefully they shave, their skin becomes worse and worse.

Don't think, because you haven't developed skin trouble so far, that you are safe. Some skins are tougher than others, and will stand abuse much longer. That's the bad thing about inferior blades. Without your even suspecting it, the constant irritation gradually breaks down skin tissue or opens the way to serious infection . . . and before you realize it, it's too late.

Be safe . . . use sharpest blade

The way to be safe . . . the way to avoid skin ailments, and get cleaner, smoother shaves, too . . . is to use the sharpest razor blade you can buy—the Gillette "BLUE BLADE". Today's "BLUE BLADE" is by far the sharpest razor blade ever developed. It is made of the finest steel by the most modern machinery in the world—and sold at the lowest price possible for such a high quality blade.

The Gillette "BLUE BLADE" is 7-times-inspected. And actual tests—by photo-electric testing device—show that genuine "BLUE BLADES" are from 23% to 42% sharper than ordinary blades . . . and many times sharper than certain "gyp" blades.

Only a few pennies for safety

Just sit down some time, Mr. Shaver, and figure the small difference in cost between shaving with "gyp" blades and the best blade made. What does it amount to? Less than you spend on your morning newspaper! Why risk lingering infections by trying to cut this insignificant cost still lower by using unknown, inferior blades . . . or any blade after it is dulled?

Try today's "BLUE BLADES" . . . you'd never think a blade could be so gentle . . . so unbelievably sharp and smooth. Even those hard-to-shave tender spots won't bother you. Get Gillette "BLUE BLADES" now!

(Today we are pleased to present another version from Gaillet's Educational Impression, 1930.)

SINCE has ever been the pioneer of civilization. Truth and justice are the foundation of it. Any business not based on these principles will fail. A dishonest trader is not successful. A thoroughly honest trader can command all the credit of capital, acquire, and his track each year will enlarge gain. Finally, the fact that no man is reasonable or an honest member of society unless he is a learned member of it, is no longer entered. The blavith may be a man of path—a military man, a clown, a lawyer, or a politician. In this age of competition, talent, industry and judgment often fail; gain the coveted goal, only from lack of push. Nothing will prove a surer road to good, will than the clerk and proprietor alike meet the customer at the door, call him by name, but when he is let (naming his son). On the other hand to be compelled to address him, "Your father is familiar, but I cannot receive name," will, in case out of ten, send him to the "cannon."

And it seems here two kinds of national planners; those who the government take over everything, and those who merely want to take over all the mistakes.

BUT ROME WAS NOT BUILT IN A DAY

(Lamar Mo. Democrat)

Lamar plan to have a dog catcher seems to have blown up. Luther Brown, who indicated he would accept the job as dog catcher, about a month ago, didn't catch any dog. He finally told City Clerk Bedford that he couldn't find any place to confine the dogs, and he wanted to resign. He also wanted to carry a gun and a star.

I would live here but the pug-dog; saw and grief called the day

set, your eyes a azure blue, but lips would tempt a saint; just, you're a good to be true, and that's my old complaint.

Sales Tax for Relief

THE political fate and historic prestige of this Administration will depend on its success in lifting business and employment out of the doldrums.

Accordingly, President Roosevelt should, in the spirit of applied science, foster measures—as he has been doing—which will put sound underpinnings beneath the economic structure.

In the larger program of economic rehabilitation taxation reform must play an essential role.

Scientific levies must be substituted for schedules based merely on half-baked and ineffectual theories.

It has been wisely suggested that a Manufacturers' Sales Tax, such as the Hearst newspapers have advocated for many years, be promptly enacted in order to provide revenue for relief expenditures and for debt service on a bond issue for public works.

This is an admirable proposal, which Congress should speedily translate into law.

THE humane projects of the Administration will be doubly effective if new and additional sources of revenue are provided to foot the bill.

The Manufacturers' Sales Tax would provide the revenues for enabling the Government to give succor to the needy and at the same time to prime the pump for industry itself.

A comparatively painless and abundantly productive tax, the sales tax as a re-employment device would put the missing link into the chain of reconstruction measures.

Introduced as a piece of emergency financing, this scientific and modern method of taxation would get an opportunity to demonstrate its superiority as a permanent supplement to the national taxation system.

After the immediate emergency the sales tax could be used as an instrument for encouraging employers of labor by reducing burdensome and restrictive personal and corporate income taxes.

ALREADY sagacious business leaders are looking forward to the time when industry and commerce will need additional capital with which to finance expanding operations.

Financiers purport to be unable to perceive clearly when the new capital funds or savings will be forthcoming in sufficient quantities.

The present unbalanced income tax schedules tend to punish thrift and to put a premium on indiscriminate spending.

Furthermore, as the income tax rates get destructively high, as they have long been in Great Britain, they tend to encroach upon the savings of the taxpayer, which otherwise would be available for reinvestment in productive industry. All except what is needed for family living expenses tends to be garnered in by the tax collector.

Likewise, excessive income taxes divert savings from investment in useful industry into tax exempt securities of government.

The sales tax, as a practical revenue-producing measure, should be passed forthwith to provide the funds for relief activities.

Then, having demonstrated its value to the people, it should be retained in order to reduce the crushing burden of the income tax and to release savings for reinvestment in industry.

THE whole people benefit from a well-considered tax program which is consistent with the maximum flow of goods and services from maker to user.

On the other hand, destructively high income taxes, though nominally falling on the rich, bring in their train economic disaster, which spells wholesale unemployment and malnutrition for the multitudes.

The hour has struck for applying sanity and science to our Federal tax problems.

Well, They Are Improving— We Refer to Business Conditions

Mr. Woodin, Secretary of the Treasury, drawing a long breath at his home in New York, says "Now, thank God, I think I can say that I really feel hope in the air. Prophecy is out of fashion, but I do sense it."

Mr. Woodin, in big business it's big way for a long time, knows "hope in the air" when he feels it.

There are actually places in the United States reporting a scarcity of labor, and many salary increases.

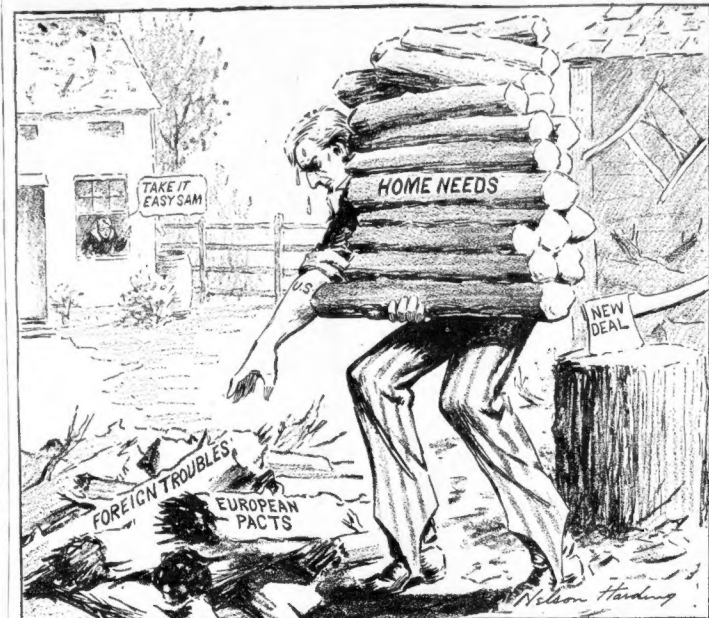

Also, Samuel M. Vaulin, in every depression since 1873, says real upswing has started, and will "swing more rapidly than the average person would expect."

O. O. McIntyre New York Day by Day

Return to Leisure

NEW YORK, May 18.—Life among the rich in fashionable suburban Long Island is no longer a hectic swirl of lawn tennis, fox chases, country clubs and hand dances. This summer it harks back to the days when there was a world, and one could stay a week-end in the country.

There is a pronounced lassitude. The business is to pass the time. When the flux of guests suddenly clogged three years ago many did not seem able to move out of arrested attitudes. They were caught in a scum of despair. But now they are adjusted—ill not particularly happy.

O. O. McIntyre's articles in a feature every week of the Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Indeed, several large estates are without even phone connections. Queer neighbors appear all around. Many enormous country places have been rented to the bourgeoisie for as little as $250 a month. In such calamities the zestful turn to wit. Jesters in sack-cloth!

During the tedium of a dull play the other evening I tickled off the heads of the first three rows. Out of 34 men, 19 were noticeably skimp. And one suggested a proverbial billiard ball. To me there's something forceful about a stumpy, well-shaped ball. And that reminds me of the most becoming bald person I know are the newsmen, Karl Riedel and Karl Kitchen.

The most unusual freak of baldness was that of Viscount Cecil as he wandered as a guest in a London theater. There was a slight breeze of hair at each temple. Then a strand that ran up to the side part and on the other side of the part a perfect spot just about the size of a thumb.

There is little doubt the heaviest head of hair, not even excepting the electric blue of old Dr. Brown, is that of Jay C. Flippen, the monologist. It is a crazy tangle a foot long on top, the despair of barbers, and may only be combed by a specialist. The locks of Will Hays, Jr., are no bald strain have to be clipped out so they will lay smoothly. The most perfectly trained hair of the prematurely silvered Brooklyn Brummel, Harry Silvey, if massed, he might shake his head and it falls into a precise middle part, the lucky stiff.

Listen, World! By Elsie Robinson

"Whither Thou Goest"

"THIS ISN'T for happy married people. It's for the lonely legion of the divorced. Yes, I know we don't seem to need comfort. We talk so smartly; we refer so glibly to our 'ex.' But when we feel better in smart nor gay. Always we are remembering—little things. Always we are regretting. Maybe it was our own fault after all. But how did Elsie Robinson start? God knows, we didn't want to make a mess of marriage. For all our brave patter, inwardly we were little better than frightened, homesick children, reaching desperately for a hand to hold to in the dark. And yet—we dropped the hand! And now we're all alone. But—why?

Was it because we expected the

When Nellie sits to read a book I notice that she'll turn to look The last few pages o'er to see If happy will the ending be. She likes to know before she starts That love unites two troubled hearts. Despite the trials they must face At last a wedding must take place.

I say: "My dear, to know the close Destroys the charm the book bestows, 'Tis better far that you should take The volume for the story's sake. And wonder as each page you read If that brave hero can succeed, And if that heroine at last Will overlook his dreadful past."

"The joy of reading is to share The burdens fiction people bear; To take what comes of good and bad; To grieve with them when they are sad; To deplore the cruelty and pride Which two fine characters divide. But interest in them is dead If that last chapter first you've read."

"If we were sure beyond all doubt That how our stories would work out To what the future holds in store 'Twould spoil it all!' Says Nellie: 'So? Well, isn't the same I'd like to know.'"

THIS IS LIFE Like Old Times in Washington With Roosevelt in Action

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

MORE AND MORE it looks like old times in Washington. And when I say old times, I mean—oh, say 30 years ago. If I were a Hindu and believed in reincarnation I should say that Teddy had come back again, teeth and big stick and all. Henceforth no behaviorist can make me believe a word he says. No conditioned reflexes can account for Franklin D.'s extraordinary spiritual resemblance to Theodore. Nothing but heredity and consanguinity and the germ plasm.

What provoked this outburst is the news that after nearly 30 years the administration is going to take up the question of pure foods and drugs where a reluctant Congress left it and push it through to that consummation which is so devoutly to be wished.

Everybody knows that when Theodore's Congress passed a Pure Food and Drugs Act it did so with all the zeal of a balky mule. It did not want to pass it at all. When it did pass it finally, the result was half-hearted, incomplete and unsatisfactory. Some of the most flagrant abuses were taken care of after a fashion, but there still remain many loopholes calculated to gladden the hearts of unscrupulous and competitive manufacturers and purveyors. The Congress would not have passed one at all, if it had not been for three men.

Hearst Magazine Forced Action

The first was the late Dr. Harvey Wiley, a chemist in government employ, who for years fought without success, for a protective measure. He was lucky enough to interest "Good Housekeeping Magazine," now owned by Mr. Hearst, which brought the fight before its great audience of women readers and has kept it up ever since.

It is likely that Dr. Wiley would not have had the success he finally attained but for a curious coincidence. Young Mc Upton Sinclair, then as now the champion fighting idealist of the United States, wrote "The Jungle," that violent, terrible, Zolaesque novel of the old Chicago stock-yards. The book swept the country like a prairie fire. It was one of the undisputed literary sensations of the century. Sinclair has never duplicated that astonishing success.

The clamor for and against it was so great that Roosevelt had to act. I believe he appointed a commission to investigate, and, if I am not mistaken, that commission upheld Sinclair's main contention. Finley Peter Dunne ("Mr. Dooley") had great fun with the whole business.

"Tiddy was toyin' with a light breakfast an' tidy turnin' over th' pages to th' new book with both hands. Suddenly he rose from th' table an' cryin' 'I'm pissen!' begun throwin' sausages out th' window. Th' ninth son advance Sinitor Bu'ridge on th' head an' made him a blonde. It bounced off, exploded, an' blew a leg off a secret-service agent, an' th' scattered fragments destroyed a handsome row in oak trees. 'Gisioin a Bivridge rushed in, 'thinkin' th' th' President was bein' assassinated by his devoted followers in the Stitt, an' discovered Tiddy engaged in a hand-to-hand conflict with a potted ham. Th' Sinitor from inhumanity, with a few well directed words, put out th' fuse an' rendered th' missile harmless. 'Th' President selected an expert comity from a neighborin' university settliment to prepare a thorough, unbiased report on th' situation an' make sure it was no better than th' book said. Well, what th' experts discovered I won't tell ye. Suffice it to say, that when th' report come in Congress decided to abolish all th' days in th' week except Friday."

Teeth in Law Promised After 30 Years

That is the rather curious way in which Upton Sinclair, the Utopian Socialist, forced the hand of the highly conventional Theodore Roosevelt and gave him the material he needed to Jan Dr. Wiley's pure food and drugs act through a resentful and belabored Congress.

Now, nearly thirty years after, it is proposed to put teeth in the law and make it really what Wiley and Good Housekeeping hoped it would be. According to the press, the bill will have the following provisions:

- 1—It covers cosmetics.
- 2—It requires full and informative labels regarding the ingredients of a product.
- 3—It prohibits misleading advertising of foods, drugs, and cosmetics in newspapers, periodicals and over the radio.
- 4—In enforcing honest labels and advertising the government would no longer be required to establish an intent to deceive—thus closing a loophole of which advocates of high standards have long complained.
- 5—The Secretary of Agriculture would be empowered generally to define and enforce standards for different classes of foods, drugs and cosmetics. He may apply a permit system to branches of the food, drug, and cosmetic industries whose products may be dangerous to health, when other methods of control prove ineffective. He would have the power to suspend and renew such permits and to prohibit the shipment and sale in interstate commerce of products for which no permit was issued.
- 6—The Secretary of Agriculture would be empowered to participate in the negotiation of trade agreements concerning standards and to make these standards compulsory among the signatories of the agreement.

This, as you can see, is reasonably wide in its scope and drastic in its intent. It aims to do for food and drugs and cosmetics what is considered advisable for manufactured products in general in Stuart Chase's book, "Your Money's Worth," and that even more excitatory volume, "A Hundred Million Guineas Pigs"—the American public, of course, being the guinea pigs.

Worst Abuses Probably Thing of Past

Chase advocates making public the results of tests conducted by the Bureau of Standards, so that the public may have a chance to distinguish between the best and the second or third best product. But that is a long way off.

Nevertheless, in view of the total indifference displayed toward this question by the last three Republican administrations, their marked unwillingness to do anything to offend or control the business man, this proposed program is most encouraging. It is likely that the worst abuses in the food and drug business are a thing of the past. There is still, however, considerable room for improvement. And since cosmetics have been without regulation, anything which will prevent women from ruining their skins with cheap and poisonous powders and creams will be 100 per cent gain. From Vaulin, I seem to hear someone ejaculating "Bully!"
